Short Bio

Calling all zombies! Holiday Death Tribute is unholy madness contained in a pop punk package. Get ready for sardonic bangers about dog strollers, piercing screams into the oblivion, and moshing/crying your faces off as their sad songs lure you back to your grave.

Long Bio

Holiday Death Tribute is an emo pop-punk trio based in Washington, D.C. that takes the familiar sounds of early 90s punk rock, picks them up, brushes them off, and gives them new life. With influences ranging from Green Day to Jeff Buckley to My Chemical Romance, HDT offers high energy punk bangers and angsty ballads for those who need a reason to dance.

The name came about after frontman Mike Dzambasow and lyricist Amanda Lin came across a holiday decoration that looked more like a roadside memorial. Inspired by this and the deaths of family and friends at the time, Holiday Death Tribute is a tangle of existential tinsel and dread. Singer Mike Dzambasow breaks free from his classical piano background with piercing vocals and electric guitar with support from fellow DMV musicians/friends Chris Fuller (bass guitar) and James Mulholland (drums), bringing a sound that sits perfectly on the edge of polished and unhinged.
